

Basics of Nonprofit Insurance

Just like any corporation, your nonprofit needs insurance protection. First, find an experienced, trustworthy insurance agent or broker who understands and specializes in serving nonprofit organizations. Nonprofits are different from commercial businesses and public agencies and are best served by an insurance professional who appreciates those differences and has dedicated resources to helping a nonprofit's leaders secure appropriate coverage that meets the organization's needs. A referral to a nonprofit insurance company is at the end of this guide.

The following is a short overview of the most common insurance needs for your nonprofit.

Liability Insurance

At a minimum, your nonprofit needs liability insurance to protect the organization from claims alleging negligent conduct by the nonprofit, or its employees, volunteers, or agents. Negligence is failing to do what an ordinarily prudent person would do under the circumstances or doing something an ordinarily prudent person would not do under the circumstances. Another way to think of negligence is that a plaintiff alleging negligence claims that the nonprofit failed to use the proper standard of care in providing services and that this failure led to the injury, death, or other harm at the heart of the lawsuit.

The most common liability policy purchased by nonprofits is the commercial general liability policy. CGL covers against claims for:

- bodily injury (someone suffered an injury),
- property damage (someone's property was damaged),
- personal injury (offences for libel, slander, defamation, or malicious prosecution), and
- advertising injury (libel, slander, or copyright infringement due to advertising activities).

The policy may also include medical expense that provides a low limit (usually $5,000 or $10,000 per person) for “no-fault” bodily injury. This limit is useful because its use does not require a finding of negligence on the part of the nonprofit.

In today's legal climate, a $1 million per claim and $1 million in the aggregate limit is the most commonly purchased entry-level limit for a CGL policy. Larger organizations often purchase policies with higher limits.

Directors' & Officers' Liability

Another liability policy to consider is a Directors' & Officers' liability policy (commonly known as D&O). The D&O policy protects the organization, its directors, officers, employees, and volunteers for their “wrongful acts” in governing and managing the organization. The actual people insured depends on which policy the organization purchases. Wrongful acts are allegations of breach of duty, errors and omissions, and other acts that cause harm to the organization or its stakeholders. The D&O policy doesn't cover loss for bodily injury or property damage; that's covered under the general liability policy or perhaps another liability policy.

If the nonprofit publishes a newsletter, marketing materials etc. you should consider a D&O policy that includes publishers' liability and personal injury. This provides broader coverage for libel, defamation, copyright, or trademark infringement than the general liability policy.

The main argument for the D&O policy is that even with state and federal volunteer protection laws, Board members may be targeted in lawsuits alleging wrongful management decisions and required to defend themselves. The nonprofit's promise to indemnify its board members (found in the vast majority of nonprofit Bylaws) is often a hollow promise in the absence of a large litigation defense fund or an appropriate D&O policy.

As for limits, the recommendation is that the base limit should be $1 Million per claim/$1 Million in the aggregate unless the organization is very small. Higher limits are appropriate when a nonprofit's leaders believe its exposure is greater than average, or when generous board members are uncomfortable serving as leaders in the absence of a policy with higher limits.

Business Auto

Another policy to consider is a business auto policy. If your nonprofit owns any vehicles, you need a BAP to cover the vehicles for auto liability and physical damage. If the nonprofit doesn't own any vehicles, then you want to purchase hired and non-owned auto liability coverage. Often you can purchase this coverage as part of a package policy that includes commercial general liability, assuming the nonprofit doesn't own any vehicles.

This coverage protects the organization (not the driver or vehicle owner) when the person is acting on behalf of the organization and has an auto accident. Thus, if a volunteer is driving her own car on behalf of the nonprofit (such as going to the bank or attending a special event) and has an accident, her personal auto insurance will pay for the claim first. If the volunteer's personal insurance is inadequate to cover the amount of the loss (the member doesn't have auto insurance, has very low policy limits or causes a catastrophic loss), the non-owned auto policy would protect the nonprofit for its extent of the loss. Without this coverage, if such a claim occurs, the organization wouldn't have any insurance protection.

Worker's Compensation

If you have any full-time or part-time employees, your state law likely requires that your nonprofit will need a workers' compensation policy. If you have employees, you'll also want to make certain that your D&O policy includes employment practices liability (EPLI) coverage. Most nonprofit D&O policies include EPLI coverage. Employment-related claims are the most common type of D&O claims filed against nonprofits.

Nonprofit Insurance Alliance (NIA)

The NIA is a nonprofit 501(c)(3) insurance company with a mission to help nonprofits find affordable insurance. They are also an insurer themselves. You can use their handy-dandy tool to find a qualified broker to advise you. They operate in 32 states.

<https://insurancefornonprofits.org>

Source: The Nonprofit Risk Management Center. <https://nonprofitrisk.org> for more information